Madlen Algafari, Bulgaria

Maurizio Stupiggia, Italy

The judges commented that it was a very enriching experience – worth repeating!

One commented:

Speech is a fundamental instrument in the therapeutic work and, because of this, the ability to write and express oneself is extremely important in our profession. For me personally, as a therapist and as a writer, the clarity and accessibility of the form of expression is very important and I believe that an academic text is good when it is written in a very accessible and comprehensive way for the general public. I also find two other factors to be of great significance - the scientific depth of the text and the passion of the student towards the subject. The balance between these two is a sign of mastery.

Each thesis was given points on the following: choice of topics and originality of thinking, scientific quality or sufficient referencing, description of theory, description of practice, integration of theory and practice including the depth of handling of the subject.
